Art workshop at disaster area in Mexico

September 2017, a huge earthquake hit the Middle of the state of Mexico. 360 people died including children. With cooperation of the Mexico Embassy in Japan, we had painting workshops at elementary school which located in the state of Morelos. We started painting workshops and told them children can paint anything what they want. Most of the children started to paint crying faces.

32 years ago in Mexico, exactly the same date, Mexico had huge earthquake, more than a million people died. So the day the earthquake happened, people had an earthquake. People in Mexico never expect have real earthquake on that day.

Teachers and their parents are very surprised to see children's pitty painting and they found out even children to try not to show the sad faces but inside they have many problem because of the earthquake.

Art-workshop after wildfire

According to United States Department of Education, we had painting workshop at the Oliver Elementary Charter School in Santa-Rosa, Sonoma.

In this school, there are almost 500 students. It's twice as many as ordinary number of students. That is because the students who have lost their school by forest fire had moved to this school and studying with original students together.

Children in Japan drew pictures for cheering up children in Sonoma.
